Dear Calvin,

I am happy to say that some of the Appomattox folk who are not in uniform today are doing their bit for the war effort.

So far I only have contacted two of our Appomattox girls who are with this unit, and I assure you that these two young Appomattox girls— Dot Buchanan and Inez Harris— are doing a swell job. I understand that other local girls are with this station, and am certain that they also are doing their best in this mighty effort.

Sincerely yours
R. Alfred O'Brien.

The letter of commendation was signed by W. Preston Corderman, Colonel, Signal Corps, Commanding Officer, and stated: "Your constant attendance on the job is indicative of the interest and enthusiasm you have for your work, and you may be happy in the thought that you are contributing in a substantial way to winning the war. I heartily congratulate you and wish you continued success in your work. A copy of this letter will be placed in your file as a permanent record.")

Feed Shortage To Be Studied At Meeting Here

A meeting will be held at the court house here at 2 P. M., on Thursday August 5, to discuss the livestock feed situation. Farmers are invited to attend the meeting and it is expected that representatives of the Extension Division at Blacksburg will be present to make recommendations aimed at helping to solve the problem of the livestock feed problem.

Blacksburg, Aug. 3.- To help Virginia farmers in meeting the feed crisis, which threatens to replace the labor shortage as the farmer's number one problem, John R. Hutcheson, director of the Virginia Agricultural Extension Division, is organizing an intensive feed and cover crop campaign.

S. C. S., vocational agriculture, F. S. A. and AAA are assisting in the program. County agents are arranging meetings of leading farmers in each county and all professional agricultural workers are being urged to attend.

"The feed shortage may lead to a food shortage as far as Virginia's production is concerned," director Hutcheson told a group of professional workers in a special meeting here this morning. "Just how serious the feed crisis will become, it is difficult to predict, but we do know that it will be bad enough and that Virginia farmers should begin now to take such steps as they can to produce all the livestock feed their farms are capable of producing.

"It is estimated that were the feed available, Virginia farmers would buy from western states twice as much this winter as they did last winter. But the high corn-hog ration, the unusually large numbers of livestock in and near the grain producing areas, and heavy demands from grain-using industries have greatly reduced the flow of feed grains.

"Virginia farmers have but two alternatives," Hutcheson pointed out. "They must produce much more of their own feed or make some reduction in livestock numbers. Except for the dispersal or low producing animals, we want if possible to avoid any great reduction in livestock numbers, for that will mean less milk and eggs this winter and less meat in future years."

The county groups will consider the feed crisis and ways of meeting it in considerable detail. To that end, specialists in dairy, livestock and poultry feeding and management and in feed crop production presented suggestions to the group here today, and these will be carried to the counties.

Five general recommendations for all livestock producers have been drawn up by a committee:

1. Save and use all available feed as economically as possible.

2. Produce the maximum amount of grain the farm is capable of producing in line with good soil conservation practices.

3. Make maximum use of pastures and other forage.

4. Cull out all low producers.

5. Stop losses that are due to parasites and diseases.

What About Peace Production?

The United States may be able to swing back to some peace-time production before the end of the war, in the opinion of Frederick H. McDonald, who writes in the Saturday Evening Post.

Mr. McDonald points out that war production includes three phases: (1) the creation of necessary production capacity; (2) the manufacture of the huge amounts of equipment required by our armed forces; and (3) the job of replacing equipment expended by the armed forces.

Conservation On The Farm

One of a series of articles about what Appomattox farmers are doing.

About nine years ago, Mr. D. Mosby Harris bought a 340 acre farm which is located between Spou. Spring and Reedy Spring Church. At the time he bought it, his neighbors told him that he would never be able to make a living on the place.

Mr. Harris started improving the farm and requested and got assistance from the Soil Conservation CCC Camp and the Robert E. Lee Soil Conservation District in drawing up a complete farm plan. He laid out 82 acres of crop land in contour strips and also terraced a part of it, followed a good rotation, protected his woodland, established a meadow strip and is in the process of improving 85 acres of pasture.

Mr. Harris has doubled his yield of corn, increased his tobacco yield and has considerable produce to sell. He started out with two cows and now has thirteen cows and a registered Hereford bull.

Mr. Harri en oys showing his farm to his friends and explaining the difference in the farm now and in the way that it was when he bought it.

PULPWOOD PRODUCTION

Washington- Pulpwood production this week became an integral part of the over-all war production campaign.

Chairman Donald M. Nelson, of the War Production Board, asked for fullest co-operation in simulating the cutting of pulpwood for military and home front war uses.

"Since there is an increasingly critical shortage of pulpwood, the vital raw material for making smokeless powder, rayon for parachutes, and a multitude of containers for shipping ammunition, food, blood plasma, and other supplies to our armed forces and Allies, as well as print papers for newspapers, magazines and books, the campaign to increase supplies of pulpwood is one of primary and immediate importance," Nelson said.
